LAWS OF CITIZENS IN INDIA

Date: November 17, 2025

The laws governing citizens in India are primarily enshrined in the Constitution of India and The Citizenship Act, 1955.

The Constitution of India, in Part II, deals with citizenship. It lays down the principles of who is a citizen of India at the commencement of the Constitution. It also empowers the Parliament to make laws regarding citizenship.

The Citizenship Act, 1955, is the primary law that deals with the acquisition and termination of Indian citizenship. The Act provides for citizenship by birth, descent, registration, and naturalization. It also contains provisions for the renunciation and termination of citizenship.

Key aspects of the laws of citizens in India include:

* Citizenship by Birth: A person born in India on or after 26th January 1950 but before 1st July 1987 is a citizen of India by birth, irrespective of the nationality of their parents. * Citizenship by Descent: A person born outside India on or after 26th January 1950 but before 10th December 1992 is a citizen of India by descent if their father was a citizen of India at the time of their birth. * Citizenship by Registration: Citizenship of India by registration can be acquired by persons of Indian origin who are ordinarily resident in India for seven years before making an application for registration. * Citizenship by Naturalization: A foreigner can acquire citizenship of India by naturalization if they are ordinarily resident in India for twelve years and fulfill other qualifications as specified in the Third Schedule to the Act.

The Constitution of India also guarantees certain fundamental rights to its citizens, which are detailed in Part III of the Constitution. These rights are considered to be the basic human rights of all citizens.
